MONTHLY COMMENTARY

Equity prices in Japan fell in December. In early December, equity prices fell mainly as caution set in over an early revision to monetary policy following BOJ Governor Ueda's speech in the Diet. In mid-December, equity prices fell further as the Yen appreciated against the US dollar due to growing expectations of an early interest rate cut in the US, following the Federal Open Market Committee (FOMC) meeting. Equity prices subsequently rebounded, however, partly as the BOJ's monetary policy meeting, which had been speculated in some quarters to revise its policy, left monetary policy unchanged.

In December, the Fund's net asset value rose. The increase in the Fund's net asset value was attributable to a rise in equities related to chemical and those related to electronic component in the portfolio.

We managed our portfolio in accordance with market trends, while being wary of monetary tightening and inflation in the US and elsewhere, as well as the concerns about a slowdown in the global economy. By individual equity, the top shares in the Fund's portfolio included equities related to electrical equipment that can be expected to perform well by achieving both high unit prices and increased sales, and those related to factory automation that can maintain high profitability by providing superior added value despite concerns about deteriorating business performance.

As in the previous month, the Fund will invest chiefly in equities in companies capable of creating a sustainable free cash flow with a clear business expansion scenario. We will leverage the bottom-up and top-down approaches, and screen and invest in up to 30 issues while seeing if there is an upside potential in the long term.
