FUND COMMENTARY

European equity markets performed strongly in January, and your portfolio rose in line with its reference index. The reporting season kicked off on a positive note, with over a quarter of the portfolio's stocks - across IT, healthcare and consumer - seeing double-digit returns in EUR terms. No style bias was dominant during the month. Meanwhile, the revelation of the Chinese LLM (large language model) DeepSeek raised volatility towards the end of the month, particularly among some of our technology stocks. It is still very early days, but a low-cost open source LLM could make AI cheaper sooner than expected and hence drive a faster adoption of the technology. On the other hand, it is too early to say what the impact will be on the semiconductor supply chain and datacentre capex requirements. A few measures and initiatives of the Trump administration raised volatility in equity and bond markets. The US dollar strengthened, potentially benefitting some stocks in the portfolio.

Among the contributors to portfolio performance this month was EssilorLuxottica which rose strongly, as positive comments from Meta on smart glasses helped sentiment. The company is a beneficiary of US dollar and US economic strength given its high exposure to the United States. Innovation continues to be strong for the leader in ophthalmic lenses, frames and sunglasses. Experian performed well as the US/UK data specialist also benefits from a strong US dollar and economy. Hermès benefitted from a luxury tailwind which started in December and continued this month thanks to a strong kick-off to the luxury reporting season.

Icon issued 2025 guidance below our expectations, hinting towards a flat year in terms of profits. The company singled out an 'inconsistent recovery' in the biotech segment and the spending behaviour of some of its large biopharmaceutical customers. Campari's weakness continued. Destocking in the US market and high turnover within the company's top management in 2024 added to market concerns, as did the US import duties announced by the Trump administration. Lastly, despite strong early Amycretin results, Novo Nordisk's share price fell slightly, still weighed down by December's Cagrisema data. While in line with Eli Lilly's Zepbound, it fell short of management's 25% weight loss target, casting doubt on Novo Nordisk's long-term edge over its US rival.
